LINDBERGH FACES 1,000-MILE TRIP ENROUTE HOME

Off Today from Venezuela Over Lesser Antilles for St. Thomas

TRAIL BLAZERS' ROUTE Flag of Venezuela is Painted On Fuselage of Craft

MARACAY, Venezuela, Jan. 31 (I.N.S.)—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, America's "good will flyer" turned towards home today, ending his South American visit. Col. Lindbergh hopped off from the Maracay field at 6 o'clock this morning for St. Thomas, Virgin Islands. The distance is about 1,000 miles.

After circling the field to get his bearings the "Lone Eagle" headed eastward.

At 8:20 o'clock he passed over Barcelona, Venezuela, 200 miles east of this place on the coast. At Barcelona Lindbergh swung out over the coastline and turned his plane northward.

Col. Lindbergh spent the night here, having motored the 70 miles from Caracas last night. He arrived at 10:30 o'clock and had a good night's rest.

The spirit of St. Louis got an ovation from a crowd at the field when it took off.

"Bossy" Gillis Crosses Wits With "Jimmy" Walker

NEW YORK, Jan. 31 (I.N.S.)—And so J. "Bossy" Gillis, the hard-boiled, wise-cracking mayor of Newburyport, Mass., who is visiting this city crossed wits with Mayor Jimmy Walker yesterday afternoon and Jimmy stopped Andy cold.

After they had shaken hands in the city hall, with forty reporters straining their ears to catch the repartee, "Bossy" said:

"This morning after I had got up I was taking a bath—"

"Now I know why you came to New York," grinned Walker.

"The spectators roared."

"Score one for New York," retorted Gillis.

"That hot shot from Walker hit 'Bossy' right on the 'button.' He seemed dazed and scratched his red-dish-brown head."

"Where's Grover Whalen?" blurted "Bossy."

"Whalen is the gentleman who wears tall silk hats and officially welcomes visitors to New York for the Mayor."

"We only have Grover for strangers," replied Walker. "You are one of our own."

Gillis smiled and recovered his poise. He began, in his glib way, to tell the Mayor how he had been elected chief executive of Newburyport. It seems the former mayor wanted to stop "Bossy" from putting up a gasoline station—"and so I socked him one," interjected Walker admiringly.

The Mayor remarked that if he was as good as "Bossy" with his "dukes" he'd like to have a certain few in New York refuse him gasoline stations.

"Is this your entourage?" asked Walker, pointing to the army of reporters.

"My what?" replied Gillis.

"Shoot," shouted Gillis. "This is getting good. I guess I'm putting the on town on the map."

Your salesmen will go home for a night's rest. You will try to forget your business cares for a few hours.

There is no reason why you should not be storing up sales for tomorrow. Night doesn't bring stagnancy in the store whose owner advertises in the EVENING NEWSPAPER.

You can have an efficient personal representative at work for you while your store is closed. This representative works for you while you and your salesmen are asleep.

Locked doors at the store need not mean suspended activity on your part. The EVENING NEWSPAPER will find customers for you while your store is dark. Let the EVENING NEWSPAPER prevent people from forgetting you at night.

Charges of Desertion Are Heard by Court

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 31.—Three desertion and non-support cases and other miscellaneous cases were before the Court yesterday.

William H. Karr, 2908 North Macher street, Philadelphia, who is charged with deserting his wife, Gertrude Karr, and two children, at their Bristol home, will be heard.

On a similar charge, Theodore Roper, of Bristol township, is charged with deserting his wife, Mabel Roper, on Aug. 8, 1927. The desertion in this case includes a wife and a 20-month-old baby. Cruel and barbarous treatment on the part of Theodore Roper toward his wife, caused the desertion. It is alleged.

John Melvin Geddes, of Gardenville, is charged with deserting his wife, Martha S. Geddes, and her two-year-old child on January 23. Geddes is also charged with assault and battery and will be tried at the February term of criminal court.

Harry Grice, of near Langhorne, who was committed to the Huntingdon Reformatory in 1926, has been recommended for a parole by the trustees of that institution. This recommendation will be signed by Judge William C. Ryan.

FARM BUREAU REVIEWS OUTSTANDING PROJECTS

All Farmers Urged To Take Advantage of The Bureau

HOW IT CAN AID THEM

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 31.—Some of the outstanding projects carried on in Bucks county were reviewed in the annual report of County Farm Agent William F. Greenawald at the annual meeting of the Bucks County Agricultural Extension Association, held in the Court House.

In his report the County Agent urged all farmers of Bucks County to take advantage of the farm bureau extension service, an organization that is educational, non-political and non-commercial.

In order to do the most good the association tries to give to the people the projects which they want, the County Agent explained. This was done during the past year by having the executive committee in each community act as community leaders and call in a committee of men to talk over the situation in their community with the county agent and plan the work for the year. This plan was carried out in eleven out of the eighteen communities with very good results.

The farmers were interested in the work being done and supported it very well as shown by the fact that 31 per cent. of the planned work was carried to completion. The report in part, is as follows:

"Agronomy: Legumes for hay and soil purposes have been a problem to our farmers. Through a series of meetings we have tried to assist the people by giving them the latest information on the value of legumes for different purposes and the substitutes to be made in case of crop failures. For instance, sweet clover is the best soil crop and a good pasture. Alfalfa is the leading hay crop. In case of a failure of either one of these two crops, soy beans make a very good substitute either as a soil crop or a hay crop. We believe that these meetings have assisted not only in planning a rotation, but in knowing what to do in case of a crop failure."

Potato Growing Success

"Potatoes: The potato industry in Bucks county is demanding a lot of attention and is making a name for itself. Our growers are not only increasing their acreage, but they are growing more and better potatoes per acre. They pay more attention to seed spraying and care of the potatoes which shows that they are putting into practice the teachings of the association."

"This past year Bucks county has twelve men who qualified for the 40 bushel club."

"This was a decided increase in the number of men to qualify over previous years. The average of these 12 men was 498.2 bushels per acre, which was the highest average yield of 40 bushel club members in any county in the State."

"Potato Fertilizer Demonstration: A potato fertilizer demonstration was started on the farm of H. H. Baum Hilltown. Mr. Baum has set aside two acres of ground for this demonstration; one acre to be used for potatoes and one acre to be planted to a soil crop. These acres to alternate year after year until we have gotten results which give some conclusive information. The result of this year's test was:

1927 lot B, 1 acre: Sod, manured, plowed, 1900 lbs. fertilizer in row. Acid ..... 156.92 bu. per acre
0-14-4 ..... 209.45 bu. per acre
4-8-5 ..... 240.19 bu. per acre
4-8-10 ..... 228.6 bu. per acre

"Corn: 4 corn variety demonstrations were conducted in an attempt to compare the leading varieties of corn which are adapted to this county. In these demonstrations we had Golden Queen, Lancaster Sure Crop, Reid's Yellow Dent. Due to the unfavorable season two of these demonstrations did not materialize. The final report was not completed on the other two at the time this report was written."

WEATHER PROPHETS ARE AT IT AGAIN

Herbert Brown Launches An Attack On The Weather Service

IS NOT RELIABLE

By International News Service
WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The weather prophets are at it again.

Charging C. F. Marvin, chief of the United States Weather Bureau, "has no standing as a meteorologist in scientific circles," and "is incapable of making a weather forecast by himself," Herbert Janvin Browne, of Washington, a long range forecaster, has launched an attack on the weather service. He asserted reports showed the Weather Bureau last year averaged less than 50 per cent. in accuracy.

In a letter to Secretary of Agriculture W. M. Jardine, Browne said the seven day forecasts of H. H. Clayton for Boston and Massachusetts during the past year were "far more reliable" than the U. S. reports. Clayton, he said, "is justly regarded as one of the world's leading meteorologists."

The outburst against the government was the result of a long fight between the Weather Bureau and Browne, and was directly caused by a report recently by Marvin, to the effect that forecasts other than the government's were largely guess work, and that long range forecasting of a reliable nature would be made by the government as soon as practicable.

"Scientific long range weather forecasting is making rapid progress all over the world," Browne said. "Its successful demonstration points to the early downfall of the present pseudo-scientific fossilized control of the United States Weather Bureau. Assuredly it will not be Mr. Marvin who will pass the final judgment on long range weather forecasting. Not many years ago his predecessor was summarily removed from office by a forced resignation for gross violation of the obligations of his position. Mr. Marvin has been guilty of even greater violations, and is still surrounded by the same inner circle of officials who should have gone out with his predecessor, and he uses them to the same nefarious ends."

Browne denied the Weather Bureau is making proper efforts towards long range weather forecasting, and said Marvin's claim he has made exhaustive researches into this field is unwarranted; that, on the contrary, he has "fought it with every instrumentality in his power."

"He has turned the American Meteorological Society into a pocket organization under the control of the Weather Bureau officials," Browne said. Brown had filed charges against Marvin with the Senate agricultural committee. Senator McNary (R) of Oregon, referred them to Secretary Jardine for a report.

BRISTOL HIGH QUINTET DEFEATS MORRISVILLE

Local School Team Wins Cage Contest by Score of 28 to 22

EXCELLENT PLAYING AWARD MANY PRIZES

The Bristol High quintet travelled to Morrisville yesterday and defeated the Morrisville High boys' team by the score of 28 to 22.

The game was devoid of thrills due to the smallness of the court. The all-round good playing of the whole team featured for Bristol, while Stockham and Amoss starred for Morrisville.

At half time, Bristol led by the score of 18 to 6, but in the second half Morrisville started a late rally, but Odyke and Wright kept pace with the rally and the whistle blew at the end of the game with Bristol the winner.

Submarine S-3 Found; Suffered No Mishaps

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31 (I.N.S.)—The submarine S-3, whose disappearance in the South Atlantic during a heavy gale Saturday led to a frantic 48 hour search by a score of naval vessels, suffered no mishaps other than the impairment of her radio equipment, according to reports to the Navy Department today.

The S-3 was located about 250 miles off the central Florida coast and is proceeding to her destination at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, for winter maneuvers with the fleet. The submarine with her 41 officers and men probably will arrive at Guantanamo tomorrow night.

ANDALUSIA MAN WRECKS HOUSE; NOW IN PRISON

Michael Mulholland Breaks Down Doors and Smashes Dishes

FIGHTS WITH OFFICER

Officer Hughes Finally Subdues Man and He Is Arrested

Michael Mulholland, of Andalusia, today is behind the bars at the Bucks County jail all because he was determined to show his father-in-law and also Officer H. Lincoln Hughes, Bensalem Township, that he was from the County of Cork, Ireland, and that he could fight.

Mulholland will sojourn at the county institution for a period of 10 days where he will serve out the sentence imposed by Justice John L. Hibbs, Edgely.

The Andalusian, according to Officer Hughes, was found yesterday morning at about four o'clock on the porch of his brother-in-law's house, Henry McLain, Mill Road, Andalusia. When McLain came upon Mulholland he readily saw that he was laboring under the influence of liquor. But he took him in and was in the act of preparing breakfast for the two, when Mulholland decided to clean house.

Officer Hughes says that the drink-crazed man ripped off the kitchen door, smashed the windows and tossed dishes at random from the kitchen closets. Then he pounced upon the tea-kettle and coffee pot and by this time McLain had retreated, threatening to call Officer Hughes.

"Bring Hughes in and I'll wreck him, too," Mulholland is alleged to have yelled back at his brother-in-law as a parting shot. "I'm from County Cork and I can fight."

Going to the residence of a neighbor, William Bailey, McLain summoned the Bensalem Township officer and Hughes soon reached the scene of action. The two were soon lost in a melee of fists and jabs until Mulholland had surrendered and admitted that he had had enough fight for the time being. Mulholland was placed under arrest and taken before Justice Hibbs. Members of the family had no great desire to enter strong charges against the man so he was charged with being drunk and disorderly. "All I got," Hughes said, "was a punch in the mouth."

Straffe Wins Battle Against "Billy" Sontas

By T. M. Juno
Johnny "Kid" Straffe, the local brawler, won his sixteenth straight victory last night when he defeated Billy Sontas, of Newark, in the Trenton Arena. Sontas was substituting for Billy Smithers.

In defeating Sontas, Straffe made a rather impressive showing with the fans and received a great ovation when he left the ring.

Straffe won five of the six rounds. In the first the speed of the local boy completely baffled the Newark lad, who seemed to stop everything that came his way. The second, third, fourth and fifth rounds also went to Straffe. Straffe proved to the fans that he could take as well as give, by letting Sontas pound him in the closing rounds. The round went to Sontas while the Bristol boy received the decision.

Tomorrow night, Keystone Aircraft basketball team will oppose the fast Morrisville P. A. A. Club on the former's court, at Beaver Hall. This should be a battle royal, as the air-players are anxious for revenge as the P. A. A. boys handed the Keystone team a bad setback earlier in the season.

"Butch" DeBoskey will wear the Keystone uniform on this night and will play guard with either Roe, McCarty or Custer. David and Trott will take care of the forward positions, while Hovgard will jump center.

The first game will be between the two reserve teams and will start promptly at 8:00 p. m.

THE CULT OF "CLEVERNESS"

The besetting sin of the intellectuals who attempt to guide Americans in new paths of governmental theory and practice is their striving to be clever rather than sensible.

One of them has made the statement, in all seriousness, that "we have had five able presidents since Madison, and each of them reached the presidency by a fluke—Lincoln and Wilson because of a division in the opposition, Cleveland because Blaine went to sleep, Roosevelt because of McKinley's assassination and Taft because of succession to Roosevelt."

That is not only an interesting thing to say, and shocking in the fashion that is so appetizing in these cynical days; it also is true—if truth lies wholly on the surface. But the statement becomes foolish when truth is sought beneath the surface.

What caused Lincoln's fluke? Mere accident? Did the Democratic party split in twain by accident? Did the new Republican party prefer the uncouth Lincoln to the brilliant Seward by caprice? To believe that you must overlook the profound movement of heart and mind against human slavery that rent the Democratic party and turned to Lincoln with a sureness of intuition that is astounding.

Was it accident that gave Woodrow Wilson the Democratic nomination at a convention which, according to all precedents, should have nominated Champ Clark? And what caused the progressive-reactionary, Roosevelt-Taft fight of which Wilson took advantage? Was that accident too? As a matter of common sense, does not every one know that a single popular force nominated Wilson and split the Republican?

To say that Cleveland, who three times in succession polled the largest popular vote for president and twice got an electoral majority, came to power because Blaine "went to sleep" is mere romanticism. Nothing is plainer in the whole of American political history than Cleveland's contact with the best sentiment of the whole people of his day—and that sentiment was vital and dominating.

Roosevelt, it is true, reached the presidency through accident, but he was in the vice-presidency because he already had shown such resource that his party leaders were trying to bury him in advance of the next presidential election. And Taft was chosen by Roosevelt because he was the politically eligible candidate for whom there was the most public sentiment.

No, people are not nearly so foolish as some who call them foolish.

A draft is an ill wind that blows nobody good.

Driving in the country is safer. Rural telephone poles are fragile things.

Self-government doesn't long survive if government itself tries to do it all.

Well, a man has a right to call his bald area a "spot." Think how large sun spots are.

Why fall out with people? Do you cuss an oak tree because it doesn't bear apples?

It is estimated that fifty per cent. of church members contribute nothing to its support. It is also estimated that they get out of the church just about what they put into it.

Traffic Rules For Airplanes Altered

By James L. Kilgallen

N. Y. Staff Correspondent

NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—Despite the remarkable growth in aviation in the last year there has been no marked tendency to tighten air traffic rules. It was stated today at the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce.

The air regulations drawn up by the aeronautics branch of United States department of commerce and made effective December 31, 1926, stand today as the rules governing airmen all over the country. Here and there have been minor amendments and additions, done for the purpose of taking cognizance of local conditions. The tendency, however, has been to prevent an increase in the number of rules governing aviators.

While there have been numerous accidents the situation has not warranted any concerted attempt to strengthen the regulations already laid down and it is felt in aeronautical circles, the present rules adequately cover the case. Some of the important regulations now in effect that make for air safety, as well as civilian protection, follow:

1. No person shall acrobatically fly an aircraft over a congested area of any city, town or settlement, without the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, over any open-air assembly or persons, or below 2,000 feet in height over any established civil airway, or at any height over any certified airport or landing field, or within 1,000 feet horizontally thereof.

2. No person shall acrobatically fly an airplane carrying passengers for hire or reward.

3. Dropping of objects unless when necessary to the personal safety of the pilot, passengers or crew, when an aircraft is in flight, is specifically forbidden. No person in an airship may "drop or release any object or thing which may endanger life or injury property."

It is unlawful to navigate any aircraft in interstate or foreign commerce unless such aircraft is registered as an aircraft of the United States. Aircraft means "any contrivance now known or hereafter invented, used or designed for navigation of or flight in the air, except a parachute or other contrivance used primarily as safety equipment."

Aircraft belonging to the states, territories or possessions of the United States are licensed by the Secretary of Commerce and rated as to airworthiness. Aircraft are licensed after they are registered and found to be airworthy.

Seaplanes, including amphibians, must be airworthy and seaworthy. Racing and experimental airplanes and airplanes of unusual design are granted special aircraft licenses and shall be operated only in accordance with the conditions specified in such licenses.

BEWARE OF MARRIED MEN BY ARLINE DE HAAS

Copyright 1927, Warner Bros. Pictures Inc.
"BEWARE OF MARRIED MEN," starring Irene Rich, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Myra Martin, secretary to Leonard Gilbert, a divorce lawyer, to whom she is engaged, is guardian to her younger sister, Helene. Helene becomes infatuated with Huntley Sheldon, a notorious rounder, whose wife is divorcing him. Sheldon asks Helene to his hunting lodge, but Myra, discovering the invitation, locks Helene in her room and goes to the lodge, disguised, representing herself as a member of the Young Girl's Welfare League. Sheldon recognizes Myra and pretends to have a heart attack. Myra, believing Sheldon is dying, is forced to spend the night there. The next morning Sheldon's wife appears with a detective.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

The tone of her voice made Myra faintly sick. She stared at this woman who was so definitely gathering her evidence. And she realized that what she had told Helene of Nita Sheldon was true. The woman would stop at nothing. Tall, lithe, not old and yet not young, with an oval face, and skin the color of heavy cream across which two long, scarlet lips seemed chiseled. Underneath the brim of a smart black hat smooth hair glistened blue-black, and two finely arched eyebrows that seemed to be held continually aloof, raised themselves above snapping eyes that gleamed like fire opals. Decidedly, thought Myra, a woman who would stop at nothing, and yet, who would blow hot one moment, and cold the next, as easily changeable as the wind.

And just as Myra was thinking this, Nita did change. She transferred her attack from Sheldon to Myra.

"You're not going to look so disinterested when I get through with you."

"You—you busy?" she stamped her foot at Myra. "You're not going to look so disinterested when I'm through with you!"

Myra neither felt nor looked disinterested—it was merely fright. But that didn't matter to the infuriated woman.

"I'll find out who you are—you needn't be afraid of that." Nita took a step forward, her hands clenched. "That's what this man's for." She pointed to the plump, red-faced man beside her. "I've got all the evidence I need. And I'll drag your name through all the mud of the divorce courts. You can depend on that! If you think that you can play with me, you're very much mistaken. You may be able to fool other women, and lure their husbands from them. But you can't play that game with me. You dirty little nussy."

Lashed by the fury of her own words she sprang like a jungle animal at Myra, and caught her by the arm, shaking her, trying to scratch her, bite her, vent her spite.

"Here! Nita!" Sheldon sprang forward and caught his wife around the waist. "Stop it!" He dragged the protesting Nita away from Myra, and she turned, struggling on him. He caught her arms and pinioned them fast.

In the midst of the melee Myra saw her opportunity. She ran to her car, started it, released the brakes and went flying past the struggling pair, around the bend, down the drive and into the road. "Stop her! Stop her!" Nita screamed. "Let me go!" Sheldon released her, now that Myra was off, and stood watching her tantrums with an amused interest. "Get her number, Botts!" Her license number! What do you think I brought you here for?" She turned on the detective, now, who stood apologetically by, his eyes wide in astonishment. "Well, of all the—" Nita's voice trailed off in disgust, and she turned her back on the disgruntled detective.

"You needn't think I'll be through with her," Nita turned once more to Sheldon. "And if you think you protected her by allowing her to get away, I'll soon show you quite differently. Botts, come with me." Nita stalked into the house, followed by the meek and quelled detective. Her eyes roved about the room. They lighted on the breakfast tray for two. "I want you to make a note of that, Botts," she pointed to the tray. "Breakfast for two. O, yes, I know your habits quite well, Huntley," she smiled triumphantly on Sheldon, who had followed them in. "You should realize by this time that I get what I want."

"Yes," agreed Sheldon, dryly, "you generally do. I won't deny that."

"What I can't understand is your choice of women," she went on, pacing the floor and waving her arms about, gesticulating madly. "I can't say that it's much of a compliment to me to pick out such a creature as you seem to have. Never in my life have I seen such a dowdy, unprepossessing person as that one." She pointed in the general direction of the disappearing Myra. "Now, if it had been some one worth looking at, I could almost forgive you."

Sheldon smiled. The eternal vanity of Nita. "So far as I've been able to see, it doesn't make so much difference to you, after all. You've been up in arms whether they're good, bad or indifferent, though I must say, in justice to myself, that they seldom remain indifferent."

"Now, don't try to be facetious. You never did it well, Huntley," Nita sneered.

"Just about as well as you seem to play detective," Sheldon grinned. "That wasn't my fault. If you hadn't stopped me, I'd have had that license number." Nita widened Botts with a glance. "However, this affair is not ended—yet."

"Unfortunately, no," Sheldon returned. "But now that you've had your little early morning party, I trust that you'll allow me to get into some dry clothes and enjoy my own breakfast. I'd invite you to stay, but as long as you seem to be intent on divorcing me, I scarcely think that would help proceedings. So, shall we say 'Au 'voir'?" I wish you more luck with your next venture." He turned towards the stairway.

"Thank you. I won't need any more ventures. I've everything I want. Come on Botts." Nita swept through the doorway, followed by her assistant.

CHAPTER IX

Myra sped along the open road, her foot pressed hard on the accelerator. Speed—speed—more speed! She pushed the car up to its limit. She wanted to fly, to feel the wind hitting her face with a sharp, stinging smack. To go on and on and on, trying not to think at all. Just to grip the wheel hard; to let the white stretch of highway fall back before the onrushing machine. Trunks of trees came darting towards her; long arms of boughs snatched at her; fell back before the pulsating vibrating flash of darkness.

But she couldn't stop thinking, not matter how fast she went. Her head pounded and throbbed with each beat of the car. Around, and around, over the same circle her busy brain revolved. Compromised—compromised—compromised! Somehow, the word fitted to the sounds of the motor, repeated itself in a tiresome jangle that was forced upon her, whether she would or no. On and on, now nearing the quiet city sleeping in a late Sunday morning rest.

As she reached the outskirts where the houses began to grow up more thickly, she was forced to slow down. And with the cessation of speed, her mind returned to all the events of the night before, and the morning—the dreadful, hated morning. How she wished she had never seen it. That terrible woman screaming in her ears. The cynical, silent smile of that man. That fat, blotchy, red-faced detective. She shuddered. The thought of the detective brought the most unpleasant sensation of them all.

She was thankful, at least, for the disguise, however feeble. And glad that she must have appeared tired and worn after an all night vigil with little sleep and most uncomfortable rest. That, at least, might save her for the time being. But would it always suffice? That was the main question. Couldn't that detective find out, somehow, somehow. Suppose he were following her, even now. She turned and looked back, fearfully. No, there was no other car in sight. The streets were almost deserted.

She went past her office building, and glanced up at it quickly, and then sped on. If Leonard ever learned of this escapade! Suppose someone told him that she had spent the night at Huntley Sheldon's lodge. Would she ever be able to explain to him. And would he ever believe her if she did explain. Her whole story sounded so improbable, she could scarcely imagine anyone believing it. Last night it had all seemed so plausible—but now, with this sequel, it seemed so absurd. All the mummery of a mad masquerade.

"BEWARE OF MARRIED MEN," starring Irene Rich, is a Warner Bros. production of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Myra Martin, secretary to Leonard Gilbert, a divorce lawyer, to whom she is engaged, is guardian to her younger sister, Helene. Helene, infatuated with Huntley Sheldon, a notorious rounder whose wife is divorcing him, accepts an invitation to his hunting lodge. Myra, discovering the invitation, locks Helene in her room and disguises herself, and goes to the lodge as a member of the Young Girl's Welfare League. Sheldon recognizes Myra and pretends to have a heart attack. Myra is forced to stay with him and the next morning she is confronted by Mrs. Sheldon and a detective. She escapes, however, in her car.

CHAPTER IX—Continued

Perhaps it might be well if she went straight to Leonard and told him the whole story—before any one else had a chance. She might say: Leonard, I was trying to save Helene from Huntley Sheldon. I went to his lodge disguised, but he found me out. Then he pretended a heart attack, and I tried to help him. I couldn't phone—the line was disconnected. I couldn't find anyone. And everytime I started to go Sheldon became more delirious. I couldn't leave anyone in that condition. And then—when I woke up, I found that he had been tricking me, in order to make me stay there overnight.

No, on the whole, the story sounded absurd. She might have left for a moment—run to the roadway—signalled a passing car—screamed for help. She thought of these things now. Why couldn't she have thought of them the night before? But she remembered the frightened feeling she had when Sheldon crumpled up on the lounge, and she thought he was going to die, then and there. And one could not leave a dying man to run even as far as a roadway, when there was medicine to be given him. Myra could understand that—she knew—she had been through it. But to try to explain to anyone who was viewing the matter in a cold, impersonal light—well, it wouldn't sound so plausible.

And then, could she tell Leonard about Sheldon's trying to kiss her; detailing her by pretending that she was his dream girl, and starting up to catch her in his arms the moment she moved. She shuddered. Certainly, she couldn't tell Leonard that. Probably the first thing he'd do would be to go to Sheldon and confront him with her story. And there the trouble would begin. She could visualize Sheldon with that knowing smile on his lips, shrugging his shoulders, and telling Leonard that no one had been forced to stay in his home overnight. He wouldn't need to say anything more than that. Just make no denial, but smile that insinuating smile, and say that he never forced any woman—they were too easy, as it was.

No, decidedly, she couldn't tell Leonard about it. The next best thing to do was to keep her silence, as she had thought earlier that morning, and never cross Sheldon's path. But she must plan some way to keep him from Helene. It would be just like the man to pay her back for her interference and her trickery, through Helene. She'd have to make the situation clear to the girl to keep them both out of mischief.

She turned into the familiar street that she had left last night, with a sinking heart. She wondered whether Helene were up yet, and what had happened. It seemed almost as though she had been gone from the apartment for years. Old objects took on a new strangeness, a sort of hostility. So many things had happened; so many things crowded into such a brief space of time that it seemed as though last seen the apartment.

She got out of the car. Every muscle felt cramped from the strain she had put upon them driving in. She went up the steps wearily and stopped to look in the mail box. Nothing there. She went down the corridor and pushed the bell for the elevator. She glanced at herself in the long mirror. She did look a sight. She was almost ashamed to be seen. No wonder Nita Sheldon had laughed at her appearance.

She got on the elevator, nodded to the boy, and went up to her floor. She got out, pulling the key from her purse and walked down the hall and unlocked her door, opening it quietly, thinking she might be disturbing Helene. Then she stopped and stared about her. The entire room was in a terrible confusion. Papers, books, pillows, everything, littered the floor. The living room closet was open, and several coats missing. She went on towards Helene's bedroom. The same confusion there.

She wandered about slowly, trying to take in the meaning of the situation. The closet door that she had locked the night before had been broken open, and a lot of Helene's clothes were gone. So was the new bag that Myra had given her sister for a birthday present. And her bed, strewn with clothes, had not been slept in.

Myra's first thought was that the girl had run off. But if she had, how did she ever get out? That was the puzzling question. Perhaps she might have left a note. Myra, familiar with Helene's careless ways, knew that if she had left word it would probably be in the most unexpected place, under something. She went over to the dresser. Underneath little piles of gloves and handbags, and trinkets, she saw a piece of paper. She pulled it out. That was unmistakably Helene's scrawl.

"Dear Sis," Myra read, "I didn't really realize what I was doing. I'm terribly sorry. And I'm so ashamed that I could die. But I got out as you can see, and telephoned Ralph, and we've eloped. Isn't that thrilling! Will write you right away. Love, Helene."

Myra dropped onto the bed with a sigh of relief. Well, that part of the worry was over, at least. With Ralph, Helene would be quite safe, and best of all, away from the pursuit of Sheldon. Not that Sheldon would have hesitated, Ralph or no Ralph, but Myra knew Helene, and she knew that the girl would be wrapped up in this new interest for a while, and to such an extent that she would forget all about Sheldon. And she would come to her senses by the time she returned with Ralph. It almost seemed too good to be true.

Myra sat for a little while, trying to rest and forget. She pulled the hairpins slowly from her hair and decided to bathe and dress and try to be herself once more. Perhaps Leonard would return that evening, and call her. She set about getting rid of her old clothes. She shuddered as she pulled them off, thinking with what a light heart she had ventured forth in them.

Once in a hot tub she began to feel a little better. And then she started to wonder just how Helene had managed her escape and how she had got to the phone to get in touch with Ralph. Perhaps the clerk at the desk downstairs might be able to tell her something. She'd give the girl a ring as soon as she was dressed, or go down and talk to her. She felt better already. Perhaps things would not turn out so badly after all. Perhaps, with Helene out of the way Sheldon would forget his infatuation and return to his other affairs. And there would be no more trouble.

At her dressing table Myra decided she'd talk to the clerk and find out just what had happened. Someone must have seen Helene leaving, and Helene was not one to keep her affairs to herself. She might have mentioned her escape to some one. It really didn't matter, but it was funny, and she might as well find out what she could.

As soon as she had finished dressing she started downstairs to interview the clerk.

"Good morning, Miss Shane," she spoke to the girl behind the desk.

"O, good morning, Miss Martin," the girl smiled pleasantly. "Did you find a note from your sister. We had some excitement here last night."

"Really? What happened?" "Yes, I got the note all right. I suppose my sister told you that she was eloping. I had to go out of town, and she seems to have taken the opportunity to run off. Though why, goodness only knows. I like Mr. Naylor—that's the man she's married—very much. But I felt that she was too young to think about anything like that. However it's all over with now, and I haven't much to say about it." Myra smiled in a friendly fashion. "But you started to tell me about last night. What was it?"

PELTZER'S STATUS IS NOT CHANGED

By Davis J. Walsh
1 N. S. Sports Editor
NEW YORK, Jan. 31.—It may be of interest to those progressive souls who are making ready to promote themselves into a large evening next month that the status of the Herr Doktor Peltzer, as a foreign amateur runner without official toleration, has remained absolutely without change, in spite of interpretations to the contrary. This statement is not mine. It is the exclusive property of Daniel J. Ferris, secretary-treasurer of the A. A. U. and a member of its suddenly important foreign relations committee, and it was made to me today by way of clearing up what was declared to be a "false impression," gained in some quarters. According to Ferris, the matter of a permit to Peltzer has not even been discussed by the committee to date and will not be so discussed until such time as the Herr Doktor complies with regulations.

There has been no vote, says Ferris. No "understanding" among members of the committee as to what will be done in the event that the Doktor comes to time like a little gentleman. It seems that the boys merely were getting their ante into the pot on Tuesday.

I frankly, the writer can see no other course for the committee but to tell Peltzer that he may run in the three meets under consideration. But, then, I am not on the committee and Ferris is. It is interesting, therefore, although not necessarily final, that he thinks the matter is far from settled.

"All we did on Tuesday was to outline the regulations that had to be complied with before Peltzer could apply for a permit to run," Ferris declared. "We said that, when he had done so, we would then consider his application. How, then, can it be said that we had given him a permit or would give him one. We didn't vote on the question; we didn't sound out individual views. Nobody said that, in the event that Peltzer complies with a strictly formal request, let's permit him to run."

"So far as I personally know, the individual members of the committee may feel just as they did before we met."

If that were so, then two votes, those of Gustavus Kirby, New York, and Joseph B. McCabe, Boston, still stand against Peltzer's appearance on any American track. If it were so, then Joseph Reilly, Brooklyn, will not vote for Peltzer until the latter promises to run in the national indoor championships. Ferris has not committed himself but it is understood that Avery Brundage, Chicago, and Robert Weaver, Los Angeles, remaining members of the committee, favor the proposed three competitions for the German.

The available members of the committee, expecting to have the Peltzer data in hand by that time, probably held a final meeting in Boston on Saturday. To the affirmative votes of Brundage and Weaver probably will be added those of Ferris and Reilly and everything will be Jacob.

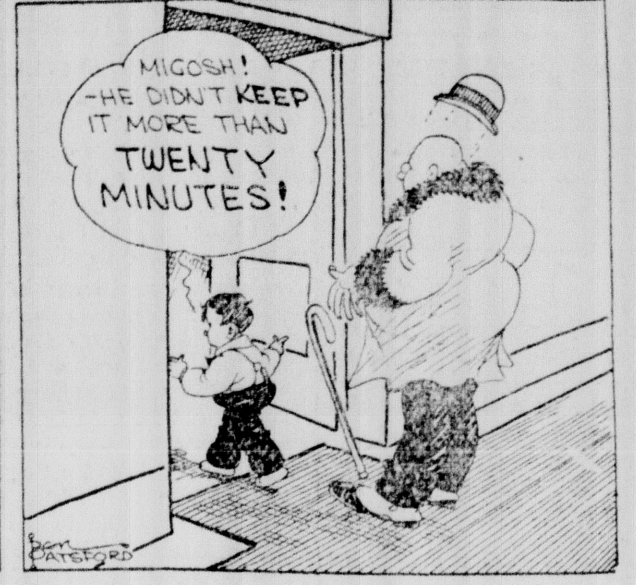

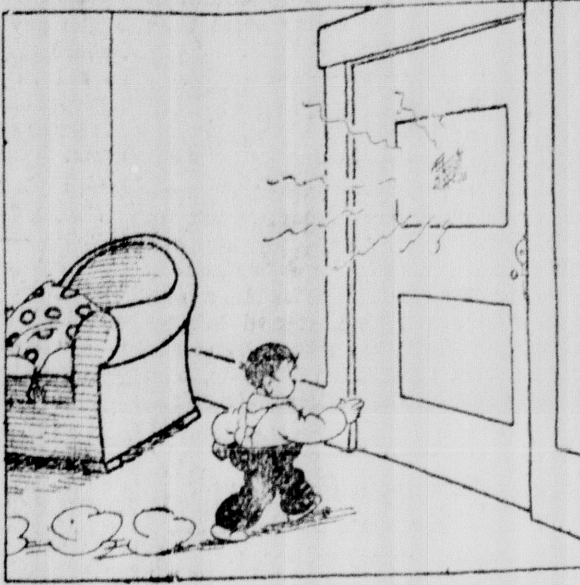

At least, that would seem to be the logical procedure; in fact, the only one. So long as good, common horse sense remains an American virtue, I don't see how the boys can do otherwise. The point, however, is that at least one member of the committee can see his way clear to intimating that they might.

Farm Bureau Reviews Outstanding Projects

The tank form which is owned by the extension association was used this year for the first time when five farms got in septile tanks.

"Animal Husbandry: The Spinnerstown Bear Association which was organized in the spring of 1926 with thirteen members has continued with a very successful year. The members of this association have about decided to purchase another bear in the spring of 1928. This association has been a big benefit to the swine men of that community. They have improved the type of pigs through the use of a good bear and have done away with the idea of keeping a bear for 3 or 4 sows.

"Bovine Tuberculosis: The Spinnerstown Dairy Association which was organized in the spring of 1926 with thirteen members has continued with a very successful year. The members of this association have about decided to purchase another bear in the spring of 1928. This association has been a big benefit to the swine men of that community. They have improved the type of pigs through the use of a good bear and have done away with the idea of keeping a bear for 3 or 4 sows.

"The cow testing association is continuing its good work. The members are serving as leaders in their communities by setting an example of what can be accomplished by keeping records. The number of applicants for membership in the Association have increased so that definite plans were made for organizing a second association the first of March, 1928. The members of the association held a cow-testing tour at which time they visited six farms and inspected the herds which are operating in the association. It is hoped that this tour can be made an annual affair.

"Eight dairy feeding and management meetings were held in eight communities. At these meetings we tried to assist the dairymen with computing balanced rations and the value of feeding a ration based upon the roughage which is fed, for instance with alfalfa or soy bean roughage about corn stover a 24 per cent. feed.

"Vegetables: The asparagus strain test was cut for the third time, the results uphold the opinion of the specialists as to the best source for roots.

"Farm garden demonstrations: Farm garden demonstrations were carried on this year, but due to the adverse weather conditions the variety of vegetables grown was not as large as it should have been. However, farmers are beginning to realize the value of the home garden and are taking advantage of the information available on this subject.

"Forestry: Forestry work is one which is very slow to show any results and a farmer has to look ahead in order to take up this work. However there are nine planting demonstrations and 3 thinning demonstrations located along public roads in the county, which in a few years will begin to show some very fine results.

"Fruit: Three pruning schools were held at which time the proper method of pruning fruit trees was demonstrated. One debudding demonstration was conducted.

"Poultry: A more extensive poultry program has been carried out this past year than we have had for the two or three years previous. We have held a series of chick meetings, culling demonstrations and feeding meetings. In addition to these meetings two adult poultry clubs have been conducted and one new club organized. Bucks county ranks high as a poultry county and there is plenty of good to be accomplished.

"Disease and Insects: The orchard spray service was continued this year with 9 letters being sent to 178 men. This service is free of charge, but is not sent to any farmer unless he requests that he receive spray letters from time to time which will give him the exact time to spray and the materials to use.

"One spraying demonstration was conducted on the farm of R. E. Atkinson to compare Volck spray oil with our usual lime sulphur spray and also to compare it with nicotine in the control of aphids.

"Three meetings were held at which time a demonstration was given on the treating of wheat with copper carbonate dust for the control of stinking smut. This is a new project in Bucks county, but due to a heavy infection of smut, we will conduct a more thorough campaign this coming year.

"Two county wide meetings on bee management were held, one in the spring and one in the fall, at which time the proper method of handling swarms, requeening, winter management, etc., were discussed.

"Boys' and girls' club work: Club work is conducted for the purpose of giving the boys and girls training in the different branches of agriculture and to show to the community what can be done by using improved methods.

"This year there was a calf club in Edgewood community with 12 members; a Berkshire breeding club in Buckingham community with 12 members; a Berkshire breeding club in Doylestown community with 5 members; a Chester White breeding club in Spinnerstown community with 12 members; a corn club in Doylestown community with 5 members; and 2 potato clubs, one in Richland community with 41 members. The potato clubs were sponsored by the Rotary clubs of Quakertown and Doylestown. One of the biggest features of club work sponsored by service clubs is the contact of farmers and businessmen. "This year the potato club gave very conclusive evidence that potato spraying must be done in order to grow a good crop and these two clubs will result in at least six new sprayers being bought next year.

"Club work is the best project carried on by the extension association and should be encouraged in every way possible.

"Tours, Field Days: The tours and field days in the different branches of agricultural work were held as "County farm products shows: In order to finish off the year's work a Farm Products Show is held in Doylestown. This show serves as a round-up for the crops of the county, the best of which compete later at the State show at Harrisburg.

"Conclusion: In conclusion I might say that each year the number of farms reached has increased. Farmers realize that the association can help them and are taking advantage of this service. According to our system of farm contacts which is the measuring stick for the amount of work done over a period of a year, we have increased our contacts from 2500 in 1925 and 1926 to 3200 in 1926 and 1927.

"Credit for the success of the work is given to: The County Commissioners for an appropriation to maintain the work in this county; the newspapers for publicity; the banks for premiums; the granges and farmers' clubs, for their cooperation; and all the local leaders who devoted a lot of time and hard work to carry out projects in their communities."
